SYNOPSIS

Roll Red Roll is a true-crime thriller that goes behind the headlines to uncover the deep-seated and social media-fueled “boys will be boys” culture at the root of high school sexual assault in America.

At a pre-season party in small-town Steubenville, Ohio, a heinous crime took place: the assault of a teenage girl by members of the beloved high school football team. What transpired would garner national attention and result in the sentencing of two key offenders. But it was the disturbing social media evidence uncovered by crime blogger Alexandria Goddard that provoked the most powerful questions about the collusion of teen bystanders, teachers, parents and coaches to protect the assailants and discredit the victim. As it painstakingly reconstructs the night of the crime and its aftermath, Roll Red Roll uncovers the ingrained rape culture at the heart of the incident, acting as a cautionary tale about what can happen when teenage social media bullying runs rampant and adults look the other way. The film unflinchingly asks: “Why didn’t anyone stop it?”

DIRECTOR’S STATEMENT

Roll Red Roll is a story that I felt compelled to tell. I went to a high school not unlike Steubenville High School. I was a varsity athlete growing up and I come from a sports family. I understand the love and passion for sports and the intense relationship between a player and a coach, and what it means to your family for you to succeed on the field or court. The entire town of Steubenville coming together to celebrate and stand together every Friday is a beautiful thing. But to quote journalist Rachel Dissell, “Is this football town putting its daughters at risk, by protecting its sons in a situation like this?”

I felt like I knew these kids. They reflected some of the attitudes of my high school growing up. I wanted to explore the undercurrents of this compelling and frightful situation. As a sexual assault survivor, the behavior wasn’t unfamiliar to me, but the social media platform was new. I wanted to know what empowered boys to talk about rape so casually, and broadcast it so publicly. It was all out there. That’s what made it so shocking.

The incident was planned and witnessed and an entire conversation was happening on social media about it. Prosecutors had to sift through over 400,000 text messages and hundreds of tweets to figure out what was evidence and what was bravado. I read the text messages and social media posts, and they chilled me.

In Roll Red Roll we see young men acting with total privilege and without accountability. This wasn’t a “one-off” incident. This was a pattern of behavior that went beyond just a juvenile criminal trial and led to a Grand Jury investigation of school officials. There should have been no question about what happened, and yet: the entire town was divided.

Why didn't anyone stop it?

If we want to understand what is “rape culture” - then, here it is, laid bare. I just couldn't look away. As a means of healing my own trauma, I've been working to transform culture around gender-based violence for over 10 years, using film and technology in service of these goals. I've always been fascinated by technology and youth culture, and how while technology is mainly neutral, it is the way we use it that is the variable. Seeing it overlap in the gender space - I was amazed at the power of social media: to incriminate, to empower and to shine a light on darkness. This entire thing was documented on social media and shared publicly. The bravado and the language used by the kids to talk about their classmates and young girls were astonishing. Anyone could see it. And the lack of empathy was chilling.

There were school administrators and teachers that heard rumors, and there were coaches who did nothing or defended players without asking the tough questions. By doing nothing, and not taking it seriously, they were enabling it – excusing and justifying it, or looking the other way. This situation underscores the need for responsibility and for us to behave as friends, parents, family members, fellow classmates, teachers, school administrators, coaches and everyone in our communities to make sure that we believe survivors, we investigate carefully, and this behavior stops. Now we are at this incredible #MeToo moment, where men and mainstream audiences are listening to the reality of those who experience violence, and it's time to shift our attention. We need to look closely at those who commit assault, so we can identify it, prevent it and ultimately transform our culture.

The bottom line is that rape is preventable. Steubenville is just like your town or school. Watching and studying the police interviews, the story shows clearly that rapists and bystanders are not “monsters,” they are us – our sons our fathers, our coaches, our friends. When we turn them into “monsters” – it makes rape hard to “see” and eradicate. We as individuals and communities have to take responsibility and teach accountability to our children so that they understand this is wrong. And that speaking up and intervening is the right thing to do, even if no one else is doing it. I am hopeful that audiences take these lessons to heart and will move forward in creating safe, loving and caring communities for our future generations.

FILMMAKER BIOGRAPHIES

Alexandria Goddard, a.k.a. “Prinnie” – Crime blogger

Alexandria Goddard is a blogger and social media consultant. She has over 25 years of combined experience in legal investigations, fraud/risk management investigations and social media analysis. Her expertise includes utilizing social media to build social and personal profiles of witness, jurors and litigants, while researching publicly accessible data to analyze social media presence and activities. For her role in the Steubenville case, she has appeared on Dr. Phil, 20/20, Piers Morgan, Democracy Now, Jane Velez-Mitchell and a multitude of print and web-based articles regarding her social media analysis expertise. Her work has also been used as source reference in academic research papers, as well as by advocacy agencies around the world.

Rachel Dissell – Investigative reporter, Plain Dealer

Rachel Dissell has been a reporter for The Plain Dealer since 2002. Dissell has written investigative pieces and examined policies around Cleveland’s response to sexual assault, teen dating violence and lead poisoning. Her stories have led to changes in laws or policies and public perceptions, including a series with reporter Leila Atassi that led to the testing of nearly 14,000 rape kits and the investigations of decades old cases that followed. Since then more than 650 defendants in Cleveland have been indicted in previously unprosecuted rape cases. Most recently Dissell’s reporting with colleague Brie Zeltner uncovered Cleveland’s failure to investigate when children were poisoned by lead, which spurred local and statewide policy changes. Dissell’s nine-part narrative piece “Johanna: Facing Forward” won the 2008 Dart Award for coverage of trauma. The story started a conversation about teen dating abuse and has since been used as inspiration for a stage play. Dissell is an adjunct professor at Kent State, her alma mater.

Detective J.P. Rigaud – Lead investigator

J.P. Rigaud is a special agent with the Ohio Bureau of Criminal Investigation. He was formerly a police officer with the Steubenville, Ohio Police Department and was the lead investigator in the Steubenville case. He is the board president of A Caring Place, a child advocacy center in Steubenville, Ohio.

Marianne Hemmeter – Lead Special Prosecutor for the Ohio Attorney General’s Office

Marianne Hemmeter served as a special prosecutor for Ohio Attorney General Mike DeWine. While at the Ohio Attorney General’s Office she prosecuted criminal cases in twenty-three different counties throughout Ohio, including the much-covered Steubenville rape trial. Judge Hemmeter also served on the Ohio Attorney General’s Statewide Sexual Assault Response Team and was recognized as a domestic violence subject matter expert for the Ohio Peace Officer’s Training Commission. She is now a judge in the Delaware Municipal Court.

Walter Madison – Defense Attorney, Ma’lik Richmond

Walter Madison is a defense attorney based in Akron, Ohio. He represented Ma’lik Richmond in the Steubenville case.
